Hip-hop's medium for choice words: Twitter

By Jon Caramanica
New York Times

It was early last Saturday morning, or perhaps very, very late the previous night, when the stream of emotional posts began appearing on Kanye West's Twitter feed: "The media tried to demonize me," "I felt the recession from the ownership side," "I'm ready to get out of my own way," "I'm sorry Taylor."

Unexpected candor or publicity stunt? Both?

Maybe neither. Humility and reflection aren't new for West: He has been self-lacerating since his debut album, "The College Dropout," in 2004. And his trademark conflation of transparency and braggadocio remained: "What's the point of dressing tastefully if I'm going to act the complete opposite?" he asked in another post.

But West's feelings dump was only part of a busy week for hip-hop on Twitter. A couple of years past his most fearsome stage, 50 Cent was foaming at the keyboard about groupies and the relationship troubles of his friend the boxer Floyd Mayweather Jr., among other things. And a war of few words flared up between Soulja Boy and Fabolous, two minor stars.

Any of these artists might normally have taken to the studio to express the same sentiments they did on their Twitter pages — and maybe they still will. But for now, 140 characters has become the new 16 bars.

More so than in any other genre, save for maybe teen-pop, stars of hip-hop have taken to Twitter. As a medium, it suits hip-hop's instantaneity well. It also offers the illusion of outsider purity.

"These tweets have no manager, no publicist, no grammar checking ... this is raw," West wrote, acknowledging the medium's promise of highlighting artists in an unmonitored fashion. No need for a recording studio, just a smart phone.

Hip-hop has been quick to exploit new online platforms as they've developed, particularly for the promulgation of grudges. The standard for Internet-era rap conflict remains the flare-up between Soulja Boy and Ice-T in 2008, an exchange of hilarious insult-filled clips on YouTube. By comparison, the exchange this week between Soulja Boy and Fabolous, a far worthier adversary, was a minor dust-up.

Fabolous is the most amusing rapper on Twitter, an originator of numerous humorous hashtags that become "trending topics." Twitter's category of popular subjects. (A hashtag is a phrase included in Twitter messages to facilitate searches for posts on a common theme.) He's the most comfortable with the medium, a digital natural.

Fabolous' initial darts at Soulja Boy were prompted by a video, posted a couple of weeks ago, that purported to show cocaine belonging to Soulja Boy. (The woman who shared the clip, Kat Stacks, has made a name for herself by placing hip-hop stars in compromising positions.) He started a hashtag, StupidBoySwag, a play on the Soulja Boy song title "Pretty Boy Swag."

Earlier this week, after some provocation by Soulja Boy, he started another, SouljasCokeHabit: "Souljas-CokeHabit made him believe those gucci pillow cases he had on his bed on MTV CRIBS was REAL."

On Wednesday night Fabolous and Soulja Boy reached a detente in a joint appearance on the New York radio station Power 105. By Friday, Soulja Boy appeared to have scrubbed his feed clean of any offending posts.

(Fabolous recently had a Twitter skirmish with Joe Budden, who's been at the center of several online quarrels in the last year or so, one of which, with Raekwon, turned physical.)

Twitter rewards speed and frankness, which makes it optimal for an artist like 50 Cent, who restarted his career several years ago with a series of self-released mixtapes that bypassed the traditional label system. And at his most ferocious, 50 Cent has used the Internet viciously. A 2007 dispute with Cam'ron played out in video clips posted to YouTube and other sites.

At his peak, 50 Cent was the most blithely cruel of all rap stars. But his recent records have been duds, which might not have humbled him but has certainly quieted him, and allowed others to pay him little mind.

For many months 50 Cent didn't bother with his Twitter at all: It was ghostwritten and largely promotional. In recent weeks, though, he's embraced the form fully. The 50 Cent of Twitter is a ready provocateur, though not in his old, familiar way. He's barely disagreed with anyone on his Twitter: So far the worst barbs have been affectionate pokes at his G-Unit crew mates Lloyd Banks and Tony Yayo.

Instead he's crass and pugnacious, a snarling celebrity shuffling groupies, proclaiming, "if you aint 18 quit following me," and adding, "This adult entertainment!" He hasn't offered this much fun in years.

The biggest surprise of the hip-hop Twitterverse is how unsurprising these developments have been. Of course West is self-aggrandizing, even in his most vulnerable moments. And of course 50 Cent is loose-lipped (though who knew he was as grammar-challenged as he is?).

And, of course, these rappers are as addictive online as on the radio, with personas that are so signature as to be parody-worthy in their own right. A handful of mock Twitter accounts have emerged: Among these are Budget Kanye (an enthusiastic, spendthrift West); English 50 Cent (50's posts rewritten in plain language); and Humble Kanye (West being magnanimous).

Not every rap star is so predictable on Twitter. Slim Thug is an unexpected comedian. Cam'ron and Nicki Minaj communicate with fans, often hilariously. Drake offers cryptic koans. Eminem is purely promotional. Jay-Z barely touches his account.

Lady Gaga, producer withdraw dueling New York lawsuits

By Jennifer Peltz
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK) — They may have had a bad romance, but now there's a cordial professional split between Lady Gaga and a music producer who said she ditched him as both a collaborator and a boyfriend after he helped launch her career.

Court papers filed this week show the Grammy Award-winning "Bad Romance" singer and songwriter-producer Rob Fusari agreed to dismiss the lawsuits each filed against the other in March in a Manhattan court.

He'd sought $30.5 million, but it's unclear whether they made any monetary deal.

"Lady Gaga and Rob Fusari have agreed to end their dispute amicably and wish each other well. There will be no further comment by either of them," the singer's camp said in a statement.

A lawyer for Fusari didn't immediately respond to phone and e-mail messages Friday.

Fusari had said the pop-meets-performance-art sensation shoehorned him out of her lucrative career after he co-wrote such Gaga hits as "Paparazzi" and "Beautiful, Dirty, Rich," came up with her stage name and helped get her record deal.

Fusari — who has a producing credit on Lady Gaga's 2008 debut album, "The Fame" — met the singer two years before when she was still Stefani Germanotta, according to his lawsuit. He has a studio in Parsippany, N.J.

He said they forged both a romantic and a business relationship, both soured, and he was denied money their contract had entitled him to, including a 20 percent share of her song royalties. He said he'd gotten about $611,000 but was due far more. "All business is personal," his lawsuit said. "When those personal relationships evolve into romantic entanglements, any corresponding business relationship usually follows the same trajectory so that when one crashes they all burn. That is what happened here."

Lady Gaga's lawyers had said Fusari was just an agent for her and got the then-inexperienced singer to sign an unfair agreement in 2006. Her lawsuit asked a court to void the "unlawful arrangement," or at least declare that Fusari wasn't owed what he claimed.

Lady Gaga won two Grammys in January: best dance recording, for "Poker Face," and best electronic/dance album, for "The Fame." She leads the field of nominees with 13 nods for this year's MTV Video Music Awards; the awards broadcast is set for Sunday.

Besides his work with Lady Gaga, Fusari has credits on such hits as Will Smith's "Wild, Wild West" and Destiny's Child's "Bootylicious."

Jimmy Johnson becomes 'Survivor' celebrity

By Steven Wine
AP Sports Writer

MIAMI — Jimmy Johnson has become a "Survivor" celebrity, even though he has yet to appear on the show.

Johnson says he knew the CBS reality series was popular, but lately he's surprised to find himself talking more about his experience on "Survivor: Nicaragua" than about football. "I had a call from my stockbroker today," Johnson said during a conference call Thursday. "He said, 'Coach, my wife could care less if you won national championships or Super Bowls — and we live in Dallas. Could you send her an autographed picture?' Because she's a huge 'Survivor' fan."

"That's the typical response I'm getting."

The premiere airs Wednesday, and the 67-year-old Johnson's involvement has already received considerable attention since taping concluded this summer.

The former coach of the Dallas Cowboys, Miami Dolphins, University of Miami and Oklahoma State spent more than a month as one of 20 castaways. He was part of a team of 10 contestants over the age of 40 competing against a group 30 and under.

The famous ex-coach and former psychology major said he got along well with the others.

"They're fans, and they enjoy talking football," he said. "When things were kind of rough and we were lying on the bamboo at night, they'd say, 'Jimmy, give us a football story.' We really had a great relationship." To preserve the show's suspense, Johnson didn't say how he fared, or even how much weight he lost. But he said he has only gained about half back.

Johnson's a longtime fan of the show and loves the outdoors. But he said that while he's glad he had the experience, he wouldn't do it again.

"The other day I was talking about how we all smelled, and someone said, 'Why didn't you just go take a shower?'" Johnson said. "I said, 'What, do you think there's a Ritz Carlton down the street? I didn't have any other clothes. I was soaking wet the whole time.'
