Oneida Tribe of Indians delays work on waste-to-energy plant in Ashwaubenon

By Steve Contorno Greenbay Press-Gazette

ASHWAUBENON, Wis. — A corporation owned by the Oneida Tribe of Indians is temporarily halting plans to build a waste-to-energy facility on reservation land in the village.

Work on the project, which began Nov. 1, stopped after nearby Schneider National expressed concerns to the Oneida Seven Generations Corporation, chief executive officer Kevin Cornelius said.

"As a result we're making some minor changes to the site plan before we move forward," Cornelius said Wednesday. Though he said he could not specify Schneider National's issues or the agreed-upon changes, he anticipated construction would begin again within 30 days. The 70,000-square-foot facility eventually will turn 150 tons of garbage each day into enough electricity to power 3,000 homes.

Residents voiced their distress at an Ashwaubenon Public Works and Protection Committee meeting Tuesday night that the proposed plant could create health problems and harm the environment.

In light of that reaction, Village President Mike Aubinger said he contacted the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the state Department of Natural Resources to see whether an environmental impact study on the first-of-itskind plant had been conducted.

Cornelius said the plant is not only environmentally friendly, but it will turn garbage otherwise headed to a landfill into gas to power generators without burning any material. "We have an environmental assessment that this is a very safe project. We'll meet all of the EPA's standards and guidelines," Cornelius said. "This is an environmentally friendly project that has no smoke stacks. There's no incineration. There are no emissions."

Village officials also are concerned the plant, located at 3100 Packerland Drive, is counterproductive to the board's efforts to zone that area specifically for corporate offices.

that the Village Board would explore "all of our legal avenues of which to oppose" the plant's construction. After the meeting, he said he did not think litigation would be necessary. "We've always had a good relationship with the Oneida Tribe," Aubinger said. "It's never encouraging to have two neighbors at odds about anything. We're not happy that we're opposing this. It's something we feel we have to do as elected officials in our role.'

Aubinger said Tuesday
